Excerpt

Gwen stumbled through the forest, her heart pounding in her chest. She had been running for what felt like hours, but she couldn't stop. She had to get away from the fae who were chasing her.

She heard a noise behind her and turned to see a group of fae warriors closing in on her. She knew she couldn't outrun them, so she turned and faced them.

"What do you want?" she asked, trying to sound brave.

"We want you," one of the fae warriors said. "You're a half-fae, and you belong to the Night Realm."

"I don't belong to anyone," Gwen said. "I'm not going with you."

The fae warriors laughed. "You don't have a choice," the one who had spoken before said. "You're coming with us, whether you like it or not."

The fae warriors surrounded Gwen, their swords drawn. She knew she was outnumbered and outmatched, but she wasn't going to give up without a fight.

She drew her own sword and charged at the fae warriors. She fought bravely, but she was no match for them. She was quickly disarmed and taken prisoner.

The fae warriors led Gwen away through the forest. She didn't know where they were taking her, but she knew she was in danger. She had to find a way to escape.
