

The True Story of Day: An Unlikely Friendship and Lost Shipwreck Off the Coast of Eureka

In 1921, a young woman named May Day found herself stranded on a remote island off the coast of Eureka, California. She had been traveling with her husband and their young son when their ship was shipwrecked in a violent storm. May Day and her family were the only survivors, and they were soon rescued by a local fisherman.

The fisherman took them to his home, where they stayed for several weeks while their ship was being repaired. During that time, May Day befriended the fisherman's daughter, a young woman named Susie. The two women became close friends, and they spent many hours talking and sharing stories.

May Day told Susie about her life in San Francisco and her dreams for the future. Susie told May Day about her life on the island and her hopes for a better life. The two women quickly learned that they had a lot in common, despite their different backgrounds.

They were both strong and independent women who had faced many challenges in their lives. They were also both kind and compassionate, and they were always willing to help others. May Day and Susie's friendship was a lifeline for both of them. It helped them to get through a difficult time in their lives and it gave them hope for the future.

In the years that followed, May Day and Susie stayed in touch. They wrote letters to each other and visited each other whenever they could. Their friendship was a reminder that even in the darkest of times, there is always hope.

The Lost Shipwreck

The shipwreck that stranded May Day and her family on the remote island was never found. The ship was simply swallowed up by the sea, and there was no trace of it left behind.

Over the years, there have been many searches for the lost shipwreck. However, no one has ever been able to find it. The wreck of the ship remains a mystery, and it is one of the most famous unsolved mysteries in maritime history.

The Unlikely Friendship

The friendship between May Day and Susie was an unlikely one. The two women came from very different backgrounds, and they lived very different lives. However, they were able to overcome their differences and form a strong and lasting friendship.

Their friendship is a reminder that we should never judge people by their appearances or their backgrounds. We should all be open to making friends with people who are different from us. We may be surprised by how much we have in common.

THE MAY QUEEN

(To be colored with paints or crayons. (Whatever you come to a word spelled in CAPITAL letters use that color.)

THE sky was a perfect BLUE and the GREEN grass was dotted with many YELLOW and PINK (use RED HERRING) flowers. When the May Queen, YELLOW-haired Susie May came by, BROWN-haired Teddy was the May King (of course). Susie May got the most attention, and she held a little girl with YELLOW hair in hold by her long train. The little girl's name was Polly, and she wore a shiny light YEL-

LOW wandy frock trimmed with bands of light GREEN. Her socks were YELLOW, so were her slippers and she wore a pretty PINK necklace and bracelet. Susie May, the May Queen, wore a PINK silk dress with a wide light GREEN sash that matched her long train. The train was PINK on one side and light GREEN on the other. The crown of flowers on Queen of the May's head were PINK and white with GREEN leaves and YELLOW centers. The little Susie May carried was YELLOW with light GREEN and light PURPLE flowers. The King wore a white blouse and BROWN trousers. Susie May's socks were PINK, so were her slippers, but the King wore light BROWN socks and dark BROWN shoes. All the children have PINK cheeks and RED lips. The border of the picture can be PINK and the lettering a light GREEN.

May Day and Susie were friends for over 50 years. They were always there for each other, through thick and thin. Their friendship is a testament to the power of friendship and the human spirit.

The True Story of Day is a story that will inspire you and remind you that even in the darkest of times, there is always hope.
